Carillon Tower Planned as a Victory Memorial

Music of Bells, One Provided by Each State and Territory, Would Sound Over Washington as Daily Reminders of America's Part in the World War

A CARILLON, peace tower, is to be constructed in Washington to commemorate the part taken by the United States in World War I. The tower, which will house the bells, is to be located on the mall, just west of the Washington Monument. The bells will be cast by the Fisk Foundry of New York and will be made by a team of bell founders from all over the United States.

The tower will be surrounded by a wall of marble, and the bells will be suspended in a tower. The tower will be 100 feet high and will have a diameter of 50 feet. The bells will be arranged in a circular pattern, with each bell having its own individual chime. The bells will be rung simultaneously to create a harmonious sound.

The tower will be completed by the end of the year and will be dedicated on Memorial Day. The bells will be rung every day at noon and at 6 p.m. The tower will be open to the public and will be a symbol of peace and unity.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.