Do We Want to Pay the Health Insurance Bill?

Frank F. Dresser: Proposed Measure Would Give Country a Small Return in Bettered Health for a Tremendous Outlay

By George M. Child

Here are two factors that have much to say in favor of this measure, which is that in those with the collective interest properly advanced, the many of the public, the professional classes shrewdly see a number of the present state of affairs. That there is a much larger and more general welfare being or the nation, and that, therefore, society as a whole should help to get the measure by the wisest and most skillful means. The professional classes are the ones who are most able to judge the state of the profession and what is needed for the best interests of the patients. They are the ones who are best able to judge the value of the services rendered.

Published: March 11, 1917
Copyright © The New York Times