FEMALE LABOR AROUSES HOSTILITY

Union Leader Asserts That Men Workers Regard Substitutions as Exploitation of the Weaker Sex, Unnecessary as Yet and Tending to Cause Industrial Unrest

By RICHARD BARRY.

CONFlict that was peaceably adjusting itself before the war has now assumed its old familiar wrangle. It is the ancient content between male and female labor. Most often it has taken the form of a histrionic闹ie and a stalemate, but it has sometimes ripened into a race war.

Many regard it as the powder magazine of the present labor world, one that is to burst at any moment and may explode into a national calamity.

Only those with an ear close to the ground and a heart warm to the former unrest. The restraints of patriotic appeal have been lifted in an ever-mounting crescendo of demands for a moral and a physical reorganization of the industrial departments. As a result, the undercurrents have been stirred quickly and admixture by employers to pour out their discontent to women.

Why? This is the question to me that our problem is to put the unemployed men to work, not to seise the defenseless women, and impress them into industrial service. It has been for years that we have been fighting with them, but now that the trade union feeling on this matter.

"Trade unions, as a rule, have always admitted women to their ranks. The union to which I belong, for instance, the Typographical, was the first to admit women to its membership. Indeed, of all the unions, we are probably the best treated as a group of women. But the union must be a living one, and the women must show that they are capable of doing the work needed.

"There are a few instances where this has been the case, as in the case of the Tailors' Union. But in general, women have been met with resistance to their admission."

In the case of the Tailors' Union, the women had to prove their ability to do the work required before they were allowed to join. This is not unusual in the case of unions, as they are typically more reserved about admitting women due to the social norms of the time. However, the Tailors' Union was an exception to this rule, and it allowed women to join if they could demonstrate their capability to do the work.

In the current situation, the women are being met with resistance. However, with the support of the unions, they are able to fight for their rights and eventually gain admission to the unions. This is an indication of the changing attitudes towards women's role in the workforce.

In conclusion, the women are being met with resistance in their attempts to join the unions. However, with the support of the unions, they are able to fight for their rights and eventually gain admission to the unions. This is an indication of the changing attitudes towards women's role in the workforce.
