Young Men More and More Active in Politics

Will H. Hays, Republican National Chairman, Says Stern Duty of Taking Part in Public Life Continues Youth of the Country

Franklin D. Rauwalt, an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, himself a young man of not more than twenty, declared that young men are taking an important part in politics. He said the country needed young men to take up the work of the country.

"The young men of today are taking a more active part in politics," Mr. Rauwalt said. "They are not content to sit on the sidelines and watch the older men. They are stepping forward and taking an active part in the work of the country."
